MYSTERIOUS EPIDEMIC

By S.A.

There are three official languages of Papua New Guinea: English is the language of the government and the education system. Tok Pisin (New Guinea Pidgin) is the language of the majority of the population. Hiri Motu is used in the far south.

According to the 2000 census, 96% of PNG citizens are Christian, though many continue their Christian faith with traditional indigenous beliefs and practices such as animism and ancestor worship.

In the early 2000s, there were 3 doctors per 100,000 people in Papua New Guinea.

Papua New Guinea is a member of the Commonwealth of Nations with the British monarch as its head of state.

The Maoris are the indigenous people of New Zealand. They are well known for their intricate facial body markings called "ta moko".

In September of 2009, over 50 prisoners escaped from Port Moresby's maximum security prison by digging a hole in the fence around their cell block.

In January of 2010, another 2 prisoners escaped from Port Moresby's maximum security prison. One of the escapees was PNG's security personnel. One of the escapees was accused of multiple murders, rape, kidnapping and the murder of a policeman.

Human remains have been found in PNG dating back 50,000 years. The mainland is situated to the west of the island of New Guinea, which is the second largest island in the world.

With over 80 indigenous languages, Papua New Guinea has more languages than any other country in the world, constituting 12% of the world's total. Papua New Guinea has the highest rate of tectonic activity in the world.

Papua New Guinea is located at the point of collision of several tectonic plates, on the so-called Pacific Ring of Fire. There are several active volcanoes, earthquakes are common and they are sometimes accompanied by tsunamis. Papua New Guinea has several isolated regions that have not yet been explored by people, such as the highlands, rainforests and mountains.

of a deceased relative back in the tribe or to consume the power of a defeated enemy.

Crime is a serious problem in Papua New Guinea, especially in the cities. When young men migrate to urban areas and are unable to find a job they turn to crime. The largest city in Papua New Guinea, Port Moresby, has a 60% unemployment rate.

Raskol is the local word used to refer to gang members or criminals in general. It is derived from the English word "ascal". Only 10% of the population of Papua New Guinea lives in cities.

Papua New Guinea consists of eastern New Guinea along with New Britain, New Ireland, Bougainville, and six hundred small islands and archipelagoes.

Following the second World War, the Australian Territory of Papua and the once German-controlled New Guinea were united into one territory under Australian administration. Papua New Guinea gained its independence from Australia in September of 1975.

Much of the Territory of New Guinea was occupied by the Japanese during World War II. It was finally recovered by Australian and American forces during the New Guinea campaign, one of the major military campaigns of WWII. There are still many Japanese bunkers and airstrips left on the islands of Papua New Guinea after World War II.

"Papua" is a Malay word for "fuzzy hair", while "New Guinea" comes from the belief that the island's inhabitants resembled those on the African island of Guinea (one). Over 60,000 tourists visit Papua New Guinea each year.

By S.A.

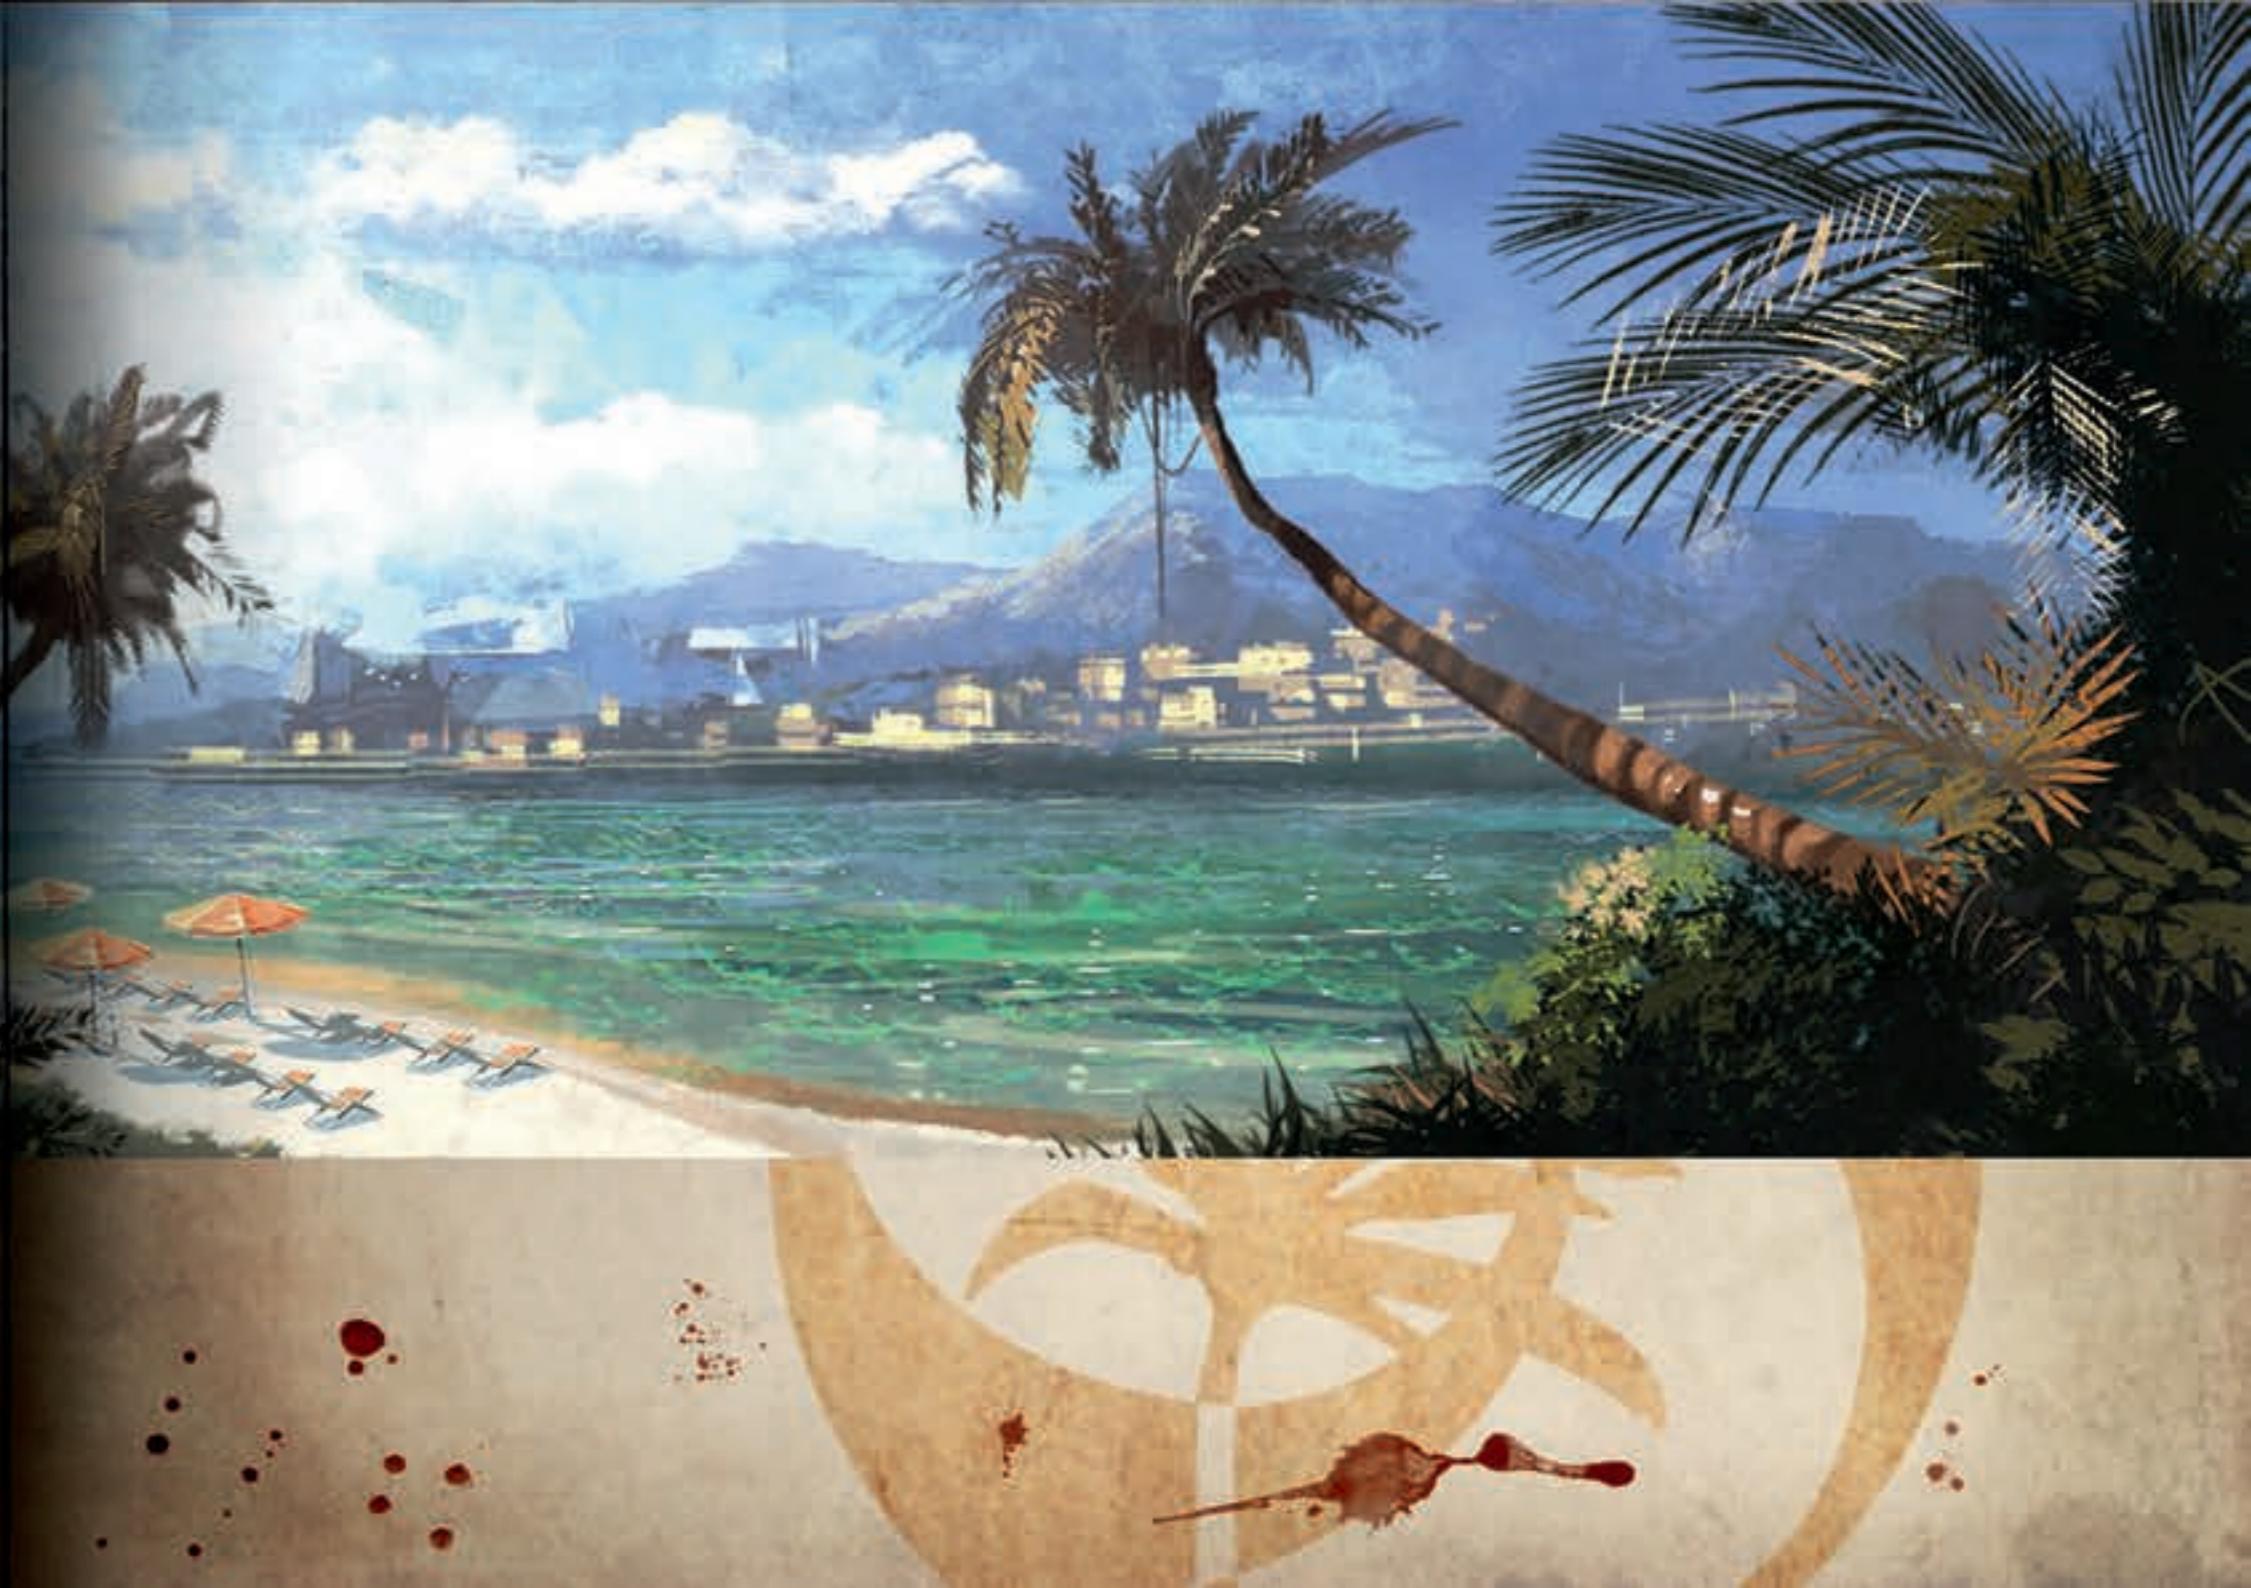

PAPUA NEW GUINEA is one of the few regions close to the equator to experience snow fall which occurs on the highest mountain peaks on the mainland. Papua New Guinea has one of the world's largest remaining tropical rainforests, and the largest in the Asia-Pacific region.

Cannibalism has been practiced throughout human history on nearly every continent in the world. There are two fundamental types of cannibalism: endocannibalism (eating humans from one's own community) and exocannibalism (eating humans from other communities). The two main reasons for the practice of cannibalism in Papua New Guinea are economic necessity and religious ritual. Papua New Guinea has the highest incidence of TB and AIDS in the Pacific region and the highest rate of cannibalism in the world.

R&M

extremely tough, strong and ferocious, these undead were already mad before the outbreak. Now they single-mindedly pursue any survivors in sight and try to take them out with a single ramming attack. Frontal attacks are known to be ineffective against those terrifying undead specimens.

Infected

fast, agile and vicious, the infected attack any target they see, announcing their presence with abone-chilling shriek. Taking them out from a distance or fighting one on one is the best strategy.

Floater

his bloated, partially decomposed body produces corrosive slime capable of hurting, blinding or disorienting enemies from a distance.

Floater are harder to kill, their tissues able to absorb a lot of punishment.

Butcher

meaner, tougher versions of the infected, Butchers slice and tear with whatever is left of their limbs. Their leaping attacks and lightning-quick reactions make them hard to fight with melee attacks. Attacking from a further distance helps.
